

Transcript: *giving an insulin injection to a toddler

“So normally I hold him like this, and this is what he normally does.”

“That’s normal for a two year old isn’t it”

“Yep”

“And we pull this down like this, then we hold his bum, and on a 45 degree angle we would go into his skin. Would you like me to do it?”

“Yes”

“And push the insulin in, let go and wait.”

“1, 2, 3 ,4, 5”

“Done”

“Yay all done”

“Yay”

“And he stops like that”

“And yeah. Bye. Yay”

“Normally when he is having a moment, like that, Tony will have him and I’m on my hands and knees being a dinosaur because he loves dinosaurs and he’s just laughing at me. We find little ways to do things depending on how he’s feeling throughout the day.”
